In 2016, California adults with less than a high school education were more than 2 times as likely as those with a Bachelor's degree or higher not to have a personal doctor.